Coloradans Reject Proposition 112

DENVER -- Colorado voters reject Proposition 112, an initiative aimed at shutting down the oil and natural gas industry.

The following is a statement from Dan Haley, President & CEO of the Colorado Oil & Gas Association:

“The thousands of men and women who work tirelessly each day to provide all of us the energy we need are proud to call Colorado home. We’re grateful that Coloradans stood with the energy sector to oppose this measure. I want every Coloradan to know that we are committed to developing our resources in a responsible manner that protects the environment and keeps our employees and communities healthy and safe.”

The following is a statement from Chip Rimer, Chairman of COGA’s Board of Directors and Senior Vice President of Global Services at Noble Energy:

“We appreciate our fellow Coloradans’ support for responsible energy development. This measure was an extreme proposal that would have had devastating impacts across the state on jobs, education and numerous other programs important to each of us. Moving forward we will continue working together with all stakeholders to develop solutions that ensure we can continue to deliver the energy we need, the economy we want and the environment we value.”
